

In 2006, employment within 15 selected residential housing-related industries totaled 2,659,467, representing 35 percent of the 7,602,148 total private-sector jobs in construction.

With more than 620,000 jobs, new single-family housing construction had the largest number of workers in 2006 among residential housing-related industries.

New housing operative builders gained 75.8 percent in employment, the largest percentage increase from 2001–2006.

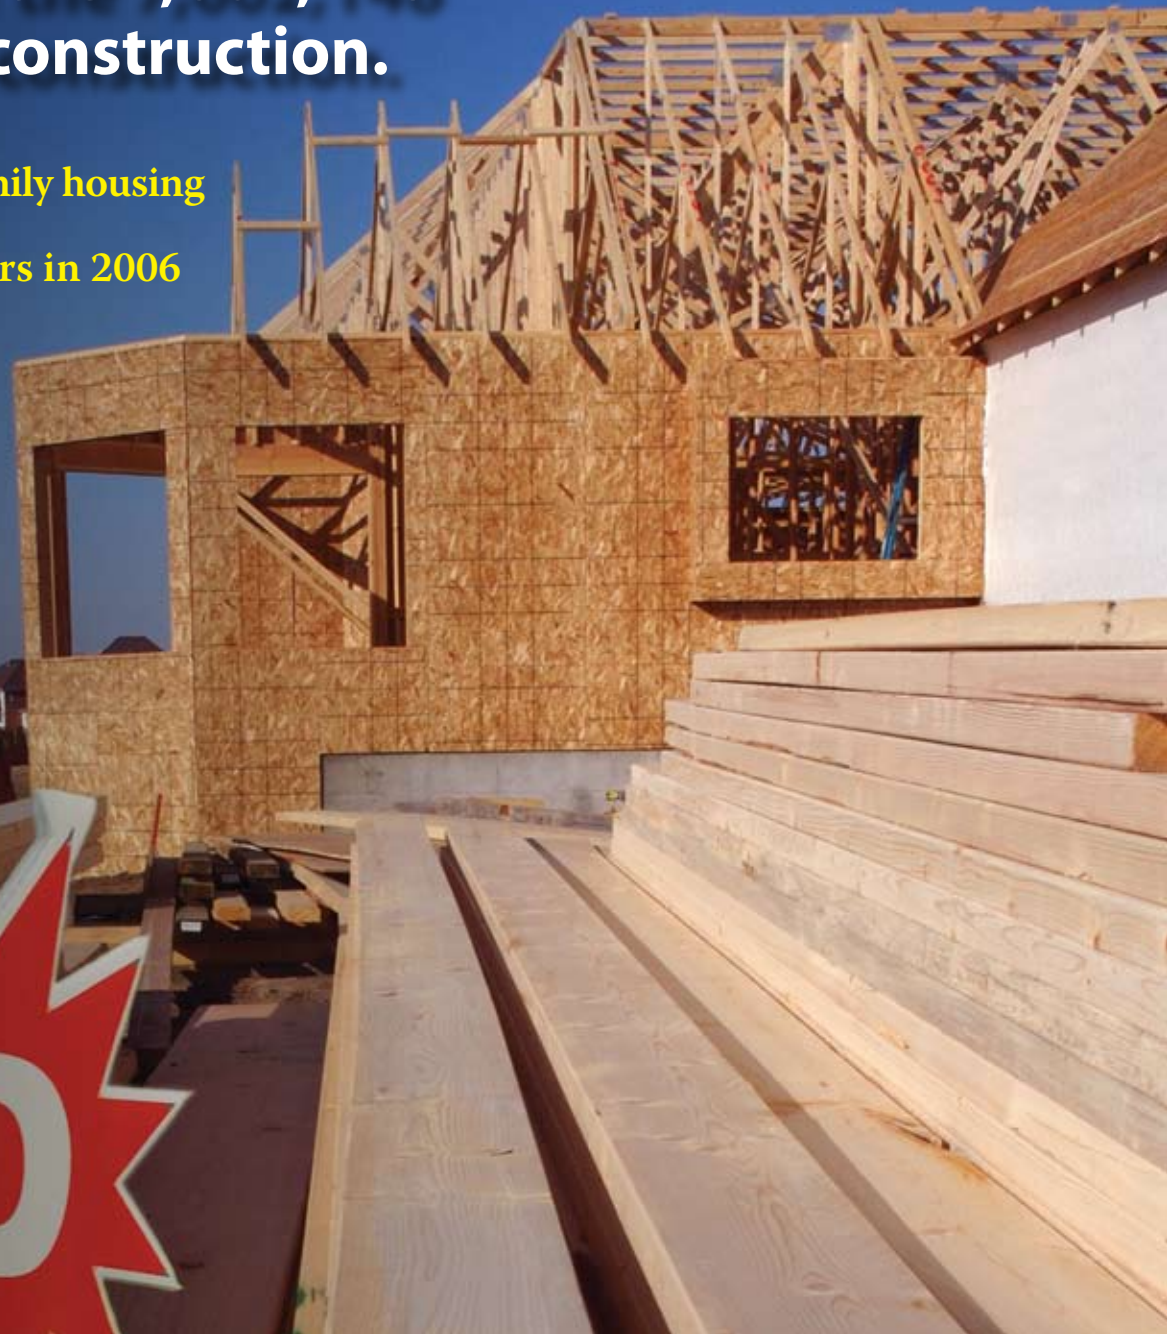

CHART 18 Average annual employment in 2006 and percentage change in employment from 2001–2006

Selected residential housing-related industries

