Occupational Employment and Wages for Selected Computer Occupations in Selected Metropolitan Areas in the Midwest — May 2017

Among 25 selected metropolitan areas in the Midwest, only Minneapolis-St. Paul-Bloomington had (mean) annual wages that were significantly higher than the respective national averages for any of the 4 selected computer occupations. Assistant Commissioner for Regional Operations Charlene Peiffer noted that, after testing for statistical significance, annual wages in Minneapolis-St. Paul-Bloomington for computer user support specialists and systems software developers, were both higher than their respective U.S. averages of $54,150 and $111,780. Wages for applications software developers and computer systems analysts in the Midwest did not exceed U.S. averages of $106,710 and $92,740, respectively, in any of the selected metropolitan areas. (See table A. For comprehensive definitions of the selected metropolitan areas in the Midwest, see Technical Note.)

Location quotients for computer occupations in selected metropolitan areas in the Midwest

Location quotients (LQs) allow us to explore the occupational make-up of a metropolitan area by comparing the composition of jobs in an area relative to the national average. (See table C.) For example, a LQ of 2.0 indicates that an occupation accounts for twice the share of employment in the area than it does nationally.

Note: An asterisk indicates that the employment share for this area is significantly different from the national average of all areas at the 90-percent confidence level.

Above-average concentrations of employment for three of the selected computer occupations were found in several of the selected metropolitan areas in the Midwest. For example, applications software developers were employed at 1.9 times the national rate in Columbus, Ohio; 1.8 times the national rate in Lansing-East Lansing; and 1.7 times the national rate in both the Cedar Rapids area and the Fayetteville-Springdale-Rogers area. Computer user support specialists were employed at 2.2 times the national rate in the Lansing-East Lansing area and at 1.6 times the national rate in the Kansas City area. Computer systems analysts were employed at 2.3 times the national rate in the Des Moines-West Des Moines area and at 2.2 times the national rate in Columbus, Ohio.

In contrast, 13 of the selected Midwest areas had below-average concentrations of employment for systems software developers. For example, Akron (0.3), Cincinnati (0.4), and Cleveland-Elyria (0.4) all had low LQs for this occupation.

Wages for applications software developers in selected metropolitan areas in the Midwest

In 23 metropolitan areas, applications software developers had annual wages that were significantly lower than the U.S. average of $106,710, ranging from $100,880 in the St. Louis area to $72,830 in the Green Bay area.

Wages for computer user support specialists in selected metropolitan areas in the Midwest

Computer user support specialists in Minneapolis-St. Paul-Bloomington ($57,670) had annual average wages significantly above the U.S. average of $54,150. Nineteen metropolitan areas had wages that were measurably lower than the national average, ranging from $51,980 in the Columbus, Ohio, area to $39,960 in the Sioux Falls area. Computer user support specialists in the remaining areas earned wages that were not significantly different from the national average.

Wages for computer systems analysts in selected metropolitan areas in the Midwest

Computer systems analysts in 21 metropolitan areas had annual wages that were significantly below the national average of $92,740. Wages in these areas ranged from $90,340 in the Chicago-Naperville-Elgin area to $65,470 in the Lincoln area. Computer systems analysts in the remaining four areas had wages that were not measurably different from the national average for this occupation.

Wages for systems software developers in selected metropolitan areas in the Midwest

One area, Minneapolis-St. Paul-Bloomington ($116,740), had annual average wages significantly above the national average of $111,780 for systems software developers. Twenty-four metropolitan areas had annual wages that were significantly lower than the U.S. average, ranging from $107,710 in the Chicago-Naperville-Elgin area to $64,360 in the Fargo area.

These statistics are from the Occupational Employment Statistics (OES) survey, a federal-state cooperative program between BLS and State Workforce Agencies.

Note on Occupational Employment Statistics

A value that is statistically different from another does not necessarily mean that the difference has economic or practical significance. Statistical significance is concerned with the ability to make confident statements about a universe based on a sample. It is entirely possible that a large difference between two values is not significantly different statistically, while a small difference is, since both the size and heterogeneity of the sample affect the relative error of the data being tested.

Technical Note

The Occupational Employment Statistics (OES) survey is a semiannual survey measuring occupational employment and wage rates for wage and salary workers in nonfarm establishments in the United States. The OES data available from BLS include cross-industry occupational employment and wage estimates for the nation; over 650 areas, including states and the District of Columbia, metropolitan statistical areas (MSAs), metropolitan divisions, nonmetropolitan areas, and territories; national industry-specific estimates at the NAICS sector, 3-, 4-, and selected 5- and 6-digit industry levels; and national estimates by ownership across all industries and for schools and hospitals. OES data are available at www.bls.gov/oes/tables.htm.

OES estimates are constructed from a sample of about 1.2 million establishments. Each year, two semiannual panels of approximately 200,000 sampled establishments are contacted, one panel in May and the other in November. Responses are obtained by mail, Internet or other electronic means, email, telephone, or personal visit. The May 2017 estimates are based on responses from six semiannual panels collected over a 3-year period: May 2017, November 2016, May 2016, November 2015, May 2015, and November 2014. The overall national response rate for the six panels, based on the 50 states and the District of Columbia, is 72 percent based on establishments and 68 percent based on weighted sampled employment. The unweighted employment of sampled establishments across all six semiannual panels represents approximately 58 percent of total national employment. For more information about OES concepts and methodology, go to www.bls.gov/oes/current/oes_tec.htm.

The May 2017 OES estimates are based on the 2010 Standard Occupational Classification (SOC) system and the 2017 North American Industry Classification System (NAICS). Information about the 2010 SOC is available on the BLS website at www.bls.gov/soc and information about the 2017 NAICS is available at www.bls.gov/bls/naics.htm.
